

James is currently a Senior Lecturer (Nurse Education – Learning Disability) within the Faculty of Health and Social Care at Edge Hill University. James has worked within services for people with learning disabilities for the past 25yrs and has gained an invaluable insight into how services have adapted over time and alongside an ever changing political climate which continues to challenge and shape services. James is a current member of the national steering group for the Restraint Reduction Network and was one of the lead authors for the publication of the Restraint Reduction Network Training Standards.

RRN TRAINING STANDARDS – KNOWING THE STANDARDS

This talk will focus on the development and publication of the Restraint Reduction Network Training Standards. Highlighting its core foundations of human rights, co-production, and restraint reduction/minimisation. Also discussing how the standards can be used to support training organisations and provider organisations who are looking to commission training in the use of restraint/physical intervention.
